Dear Graduate Student:

I wish to congratulate you on initiating work on a thesis or dissertation for a graduate degree. This will be a significant undertaking but one which you will take pride and satisfaction in accomplishing. The conduct of your study and the process of writing a thesis or dissertation constitute the heart of the professional skills of a graduate education.

The contents of a thesis or dissertation are very important. You, your major professor, and your committee are responsible for the accuracy and the validity of the content of a thesis or dissertation. You and they are also responsible for the form, and we in the Graduate School wish to assist you. That is the purpose of these guidelines. Form is critical, because errors in writing and formatting distract the reader, and may suggest that this lack of attention to detail affected the results and conclusions of your study.
